

A GREAT YEAR STARTS WITH STUDENT READINESS

New academic year begins - fresh notebooks, sharpened pencils, eager faces. But not all students seem ready. Some struggle to adjust; others hesitate to participate. A few appear anxious, unmotivated, or already falling behind. You start to wonder - is it more than first-week jitters?

That's when you realise: student readiness isn't automatic - it needs planning and the right support.

Returning students struggling with learning gaps, low motivation, or classroom routines?

Assess early:

Do simple diagnostic assessments in the first week to identify learning gaps and provide targeted support.

Set clear routines:

Establish daily routines and classroom expectations for a better-focused learning environment.

Refresh with recap activities:

Use engaging tools like quizzes, games and discussions to recall prior knowledge and improve their confidence.

Support emotionally:

Create safe spaces through regular check-ins or mentorship to help students feel secure and ready to learn.

Can early action close learning gaps?

Watch to learn how timely support boosts student confidence and readiness.
